STRENGTHEN

YOUR MID-SECTION

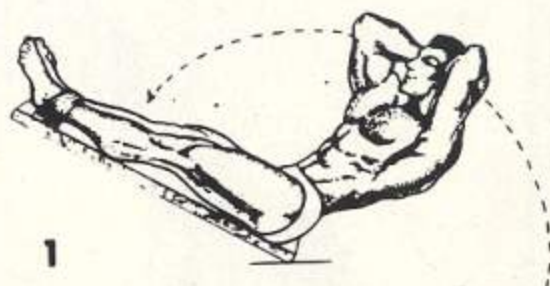

WITH THESE GREAT EXERCISES

ALTHOUGH MASSIVE arms and a powerful chest are the two most impressive features of a bodybuilder when he is wearing a form-fitting T-shirt, at the beach, in swim trunks, the bodybuilder who has these two physical attributes PLUS a set of neatly chiselled abdominals or "washboard" stomach is the bodybuilder who really draws the admiring glances from those around him.

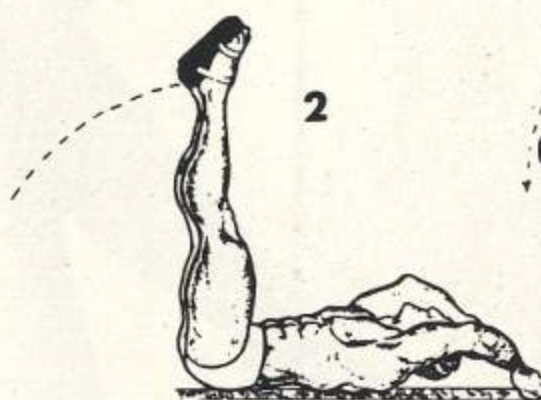

There are two major mid-section muscle groups, the straight muscle of the abdominals, called the rectus abdominus — the stomach area proper — and the external oblique abdominals at both sides of the stomach, just above the hip area. When all the muscles of this region act together they tighten up and protect the stomach from internal injury.

We have chosen five favorite abdominal exercises of a former MR. UNIVERSE winner to pass on to you in the belief that these will help you to develop a strong stomach. The exercises, all illustrated in the adjoining column, are: Sit-ups on Incline Bench (Figure #1), Leg Raises—either on floor or on a bench (Figure #2), Side bends with Dumbbells (Figure #3), Bending from Side to Side (Figure #4), and Trunk Rotating (Figure #5).

To perform the exercises, just follow the directional arrows shown with the illustrations. Do all exercises 20 to 25 reps and in sets of two or more. On the Leg Raises, this exercise is even more effective if iron boots are worn, or, better yet, if the exercise is performed while hanging from a chinning bar.

A PORTFOLIO

BOYS FROM

Senor Guerra has a special affinity for finding and photographing the beauty of the youthful Argentinian. Here we have some fine examples of his mastery of this art.

JUSTO PASTOR displays the handsome muscularity of his young body in these two studies.
